NEWARK, N.J. — Federal authorities have charged a second New Jersey man with allegedly conspiring to murder former Chilean Ambassador Orlando Letelier who was killed when a bomb exploded under his car in 1976.

Alvin Ross Diaz, 45, is being held in lieu of $200,000 bail in Newark after authorities dropped lesser charges against him. Ignacio Novo Sampol is also being held on a conspiracy to murder charge.

Authorities believe Letelier was killed by Cuban exiles in a conspiracy with the Chilean military junta.

In Florida, an FBI agent filed an affidavit two weeks ago claiming an electronic paging device was found in Diaz' car in Miami. The agent said the device may have been used to detonate the bomb which exploded under Letelier's car in Washington on Sept. 26, 1976.

Justice Reportedly Favors
Lockheed Case Prosecutions

Justice Department investigators have recommended that Lockheed Aircraft Corp. and a former company president be prosecuted in connection with payoffs to Japanese officials, department sources said yesterday.

If Attorney General Griffin Bell approves the recommendation, prosecutors are expected to seek federal grand jury indictments soon in federal court in the District of Columbia, the sources said.
